Editorial Review

From Publishers Weekly

Minerva Louise might be reckoned an Amelia Bedelia of the animal world. Here the curious hen mistakes a school for a barn, a janitor for a farmer and a baseball for an egg. Ages 2-6. (Sept.)

From School Library Journal

Kindergarten-Grade 2?Minerva Louise makes a third appearance here in a story that will delight her numerous fans. This time the chatty chicken wanders into a red school building, thinking it is a fancy barn. She mistakenly identifies stalls (classrooms), milking stools (story-time seats), nesting boxes (children's cubbies), and even a nest with an egg (baseball glove with a ball). She hurries home with new decorating ideas, comfortably settling down amidst a hose, seed packets, pencil, and even winter mittens. This is a picture book with a minimum of words for maximum appeal. Stoeke's vibrant, happy illustrations fill the pages with humor and excitement. The bright primary colors are a perfect foil for this goofy, lumpy white hen. Another winner for preschoolers and beginning readers alike.?Beth Tegart, Oneida City Schools, NY

Ages 4^6. Minerva Louise the hen wanders away from the farm and explores a nearby school. Interpreting everything according to her own experience, she looks around the school, which she sees as a big red barn, and observes a farmer hanging out his laundry to dry (a custodian raising the flag), a feed bucket (wastepaper basket), and nesting boxes (cubbyholes labeled with children's names). After putting an egg (baseball) in a nest (glove) to keep it warm, she returns to the henhouse. Broad pencil drawings brightened with washes give the simple artwork clarity as well as wit. The beauty of the humor is that children will be in on the joke every step of the way. Teachers may enjoy challenging their students to think of other creative uses for familiar objects. An enjoyable lark. Carolyn Phelan
